The study of humanities is essential today.

OR

India has a bright future.

(25 marks)

- II. Read the poem given below and answer the questions that follow:

My Heart Leaps Up

My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky;
So was it when my life began;
So is it now I am a man;
So be it when I shall grow old,
Or let me die!
The Child is father of the Man;
And I could wish my days to be
Bound each to each by natural piety.

B. Point out any literary device from the poem.
C. Explain the meaning of line seven in your own words.
D. How does the title fit the ideas expressed in the poem?

(20 marks)

- III. Write a précis of the passage given below, reducing it to one-third of its length. Give a suitable title. Make sure you write one word in each box in the answer sheet:

Even before Independence, India sustained a small and vibrant scientific community with a few, but outstanding contributions to its credit. This was managed in spite of the abject poverty and widespread illiteracy that discouraged education of any kind, let alone advanced studies in science and technology. Out people might have missed the Industrial Revolution and its economic and social consequences, but not the revolutionary changes that were then taking place in science. Thus, in August 1947, a newly-independent India inherited a science community to work with. New laboratories were built; a new science department of the government formed and also commissions to harness the power of atom and space. The Government of the day came out with innovations to free science organizations from the rigid and crippling bureaucratic rules and procedures that were then the norms. As though to underline the importance of science further, Jawaharlal Nehru kept the portfolio of science with himself and persuaded Parliament to pass the Science Policy Resolution, a Utopian document with few parallels in the history of state and science. Much later, his daughter Indira Gandhi would also release a similar Technology Policy Statement of her government, reiterating the commitment of the State to the pursuance of indigenous technology. With all this support how have we done in the past 50 years?

Not bad at all, in technology, though our own assessment of success, at least until recently, seemed to be influenced more by the Cold War politics and regional geopolitics of the past decades than by achievements that have helped the country to be economically and politically independent and technologically relevant. India today is largely free of food imports. Thanks to the Green Revolution ushered in by agricultural scientists and farmers, the country has turned the begging bowl into a veritable bread basket. While more needs to be done – our yields are still some of the lowest in the world – the periodic bouts of scarcity and famine have been eliminated forever from the Indian landscape. The country has taken this achievement and similar successes in other areas of agricultural and animal husbandry so much for granted that we do not recognize how close India came to becoming a "failed State" dependent forever on food handouts from outside.

There are a few other tales of success, though not of this scale. India today routinely launches remote sensing satellites and will soon be launching its own geostationary communication and weather forecasting satellites, integrating India into one national village. The villages and towns are successfully connected by more than six million indigenously – designed and manufactured C-DoT telephone exchange lines. Indian chemical and pharmaceutical industries now have their own product and process technologies and are becoming globally competitive. An Indian battle tank – currently rated as one of the best of its class – is entering into production. India was one of the earliest to build nuclear power reactors and has also an indigenously designed and successful, surface – to – surface missile. (489 words) (15 marks)
